[SILENCE]

This parking structure, constructed as a result of a process in which dissenting thought was suppressed and denied, is not merely a building but a spatial embodiment of social oppression. Its invisibility reflects the erasure of dissenting voices.

[DISSOLUTION]

The unraveling of this dark structure initiates the first intervention that enables the construction of dissent bodies. Beginning from one of its surfaces, this dissolution acts as a metaphorical rupture within the system.

[UNVEILING]

As the dissolution deepens, the invisible structure begins to produce public spaces. Thus, the space transforms from one of suppression into one of expression—becoming a new ground for dissenting thought.
